Flying a drone is hard, but it's even harder for a drone to fly itself. Now, MIT has found a way to program autonomous drones to avoid obstacles, so they can fly through crowded spaces. 3

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

If you've ever tried to fly a drone, you know it's hard not to hit things. When it comes to autonomous drones, it's an even bigger challenge. But researchers at MIT's Computer Science and Artificial Intelligence Lab have created a new system that helps these flying robots avoid running into things, so that they can fly through forests, cities and other crowded spaces. TRUMP SUPPORTS KELLY DESPITE AIDES' EXITS

I White House advisers on Sunday tried to quash speculation that President Donald Trump may seek to replace Chief of Staff John Kelly over his handling of domestic abuse accusations against an aide who resigned last week. Senior Trump adviser Kellyanne Conway said the president asked her to make clear he supports Kelly, who has come under intense scrutiny since the allegations against White House staff secretary Rob Porter surfaced. Porter resigned after two former wives said he abused them. His abrupt departure raised questions about how long it took Trump's team to act on the accusations. Two days after Porter stepped down, White House speechwriter David Sorensen resigned amid his ex-wife's allegations of domestic violence. Both men have denied the accusations.

MASS. AUTHORITIES SEIZE 30 POUNDS OF FENTANYL

2 State and local authorities have seized 77 pounds of narcotics — including heroin, cocaine and more than 30 pounds of the deadly opiate fentanyl — as the result of a six-month investigation, according to Suffolk County DA Daniel F. Conley's office. The investigation involved wiretaps to get evidence that authorities say brought down two Boston-area drug trafficking organizations. Police from Boston,

Braintree and Randolph as well as federal officers from the DEA's New England Division were involved in what officials say was one of the longest wiretap investigations and biggest drug busts in Massachusetts history. Fentanyl has been blamed for exacerbating the opioid crisis. A lethal dose of heroin is about 30 milligrams, while 3 milligrams of fentanyl is enough to kill an average-size adult male, according to Stat. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

HARVARD UNIVERSITY NAMES NEW PRESIDENT

4 Harvard University on Sunday announced that Lawrence Bacow from its Kennedy School of Government would be its 29th president starting on July 1, calling him one of the most experienced and respected leaders in higher education. Bacow, 66, previously served as president of Tufts University for a decade. He replaces Drew Faust, the first woman to hold Harvard's top job. "Larry Bacow is one of the most accomplished, admired, insightful, and effective leaders in American higher education," said William Lee, senior fellow of the Harvard Corporation and chair of Harvard's presidential search committee. Bacow, who was born in Michigan to immigrant parents, attended MIT and holds three degrees from Harvard. He spent 24 years on the MIT faculty before being named president of Tufts.

NEW REPORT SHEDS LIGHT ON HEALTH OF BOSTON

5 Boston is known as a health hub thanks to its grade-A hospitals, but how healthy are the city's residents? The new 2016-2017 Health of Boston report from the Boston Public Health Commission helped shed light on just that. Data showed improvements when it comes to lowering the infant mortality rate — from 2006 to 2015, deaths among black infants dropped 36 percent — and reducing things like teen pregnancy — from 2011 to 2015, the birth rate among Boston 15 to 17-year-olds decreased 57 percent. Cigarette smoking and binge drinking among young people is also down, with the percentage of high school students saying they smoke down to 4.8 percent from 7.5 percent in 2007. From 2011 to 2015, the cancer mortality rate decreased 12 percent, and the rate of newly-diagnosed HIV cases dropped 25 percent. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

PASSENGER DRONES

How safe would you feel if you were a passenger in a driverless flying taxi going from your home to your place of work or school?

New research helps self-flying drones avoid crashes

Researchers at MIT's Computer Science and Artificial Intelligence Lab are changing how autonomous drones fly through the air.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Flying a drone is hard — all the crash videos available online make that clear.

It's even harder for a drone to fly itself, especially through areas like cities, forests or warehouses, where there are a lot of things to run into.

Autonomous drones could revolutionize a lot of fields, but before your packages can be delivered by a self-navigating robot, it has to know how to fly through dense environments without crashing.

Scientists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Computer Science and Artificial Intelligence Laboratory (CSAIL) are making headway on just that.

CSAIL researchers have developed a system called Nanomap that allows autonomous drones to fly 20 miles per hour through crowded spaces, avoiding the obstacles that could stop them in their tracks.

It's hard for autonomous drones to know exactly where they are or how far they've traveled, explained Pete Florence, an MIT graduate student and lead author on a paper explaining Nanomap.

"Because they don't have wheels on the ground, they're much more uncertain about where they're moving," he said. "If they had wheels, it could be as simple as measuring how much the wheels turned and that's a good measure of how far you moved."

Instead, drones take a lot of measurements — but that takes time and can't be done as fast as it's flying through the air.

Nanomap takes a more general approach, basically always thinking that the drone's position is uncertain, not a fixed dot on a digital map.

"As roboticists, we get excited about all the little details, but the big picture this is all about is not hitting things," Florence said.

By thinking that a drone doesn't need to take "100 different measurements and find the average to figure out its exact location in space," according to MIT, Nanomap gathers just enough information to know an object is in a general area.

And that's pretty revolutionary. This system can apply to all autonomous tech, like self-driving cars. When it comes to drones, it can help them better conduct search and rescue operations through dense areas full of obstacles, researchers say, or deliver packages through a crowded city.

It can also apply to one of the biggest drone uses: filming video.

"There's a dream of having a drone follow you while you're snowboarding and dodge the trees," Florence said. "Lots of companies are working on that, and this approach definitely helps."

A guide to understanding the Oscar-nominated animated short films

You probably assumed that you'd never see Pixar and Kobe Bryant go up against each other in any kind of competition. But that's exactly what's going to go down March 4 — both are up for Oscars in the animated short film category. Here's what we think of this year's nominees, from the utterly amazing to the, well, very good. GREGORY WAKEMAN

'Dear Basketball'

Kobe Bryant's love letter to the sport that made him famous, "Dear Basketball" is tender, touching and gives you a sense of what pushed the athlete to such heights — but also suggests that a part of him died the moment he retired. The combination of Bryant's insight, director Glen Keane's nostalgic animation and John Williams' understated, powerful score makes "Dear Basketball" a must for any sports fan. It's also the short film most likely to win the gong.

'Garden Party'

It might take a little while for the concept of "Garden Party" to become apparent, but you're still immediately hooked because of its truly stunning animation. The film, which follows a group of frogs taking over a seemingly abandoned mansion, looks so startlingly real you'll probably fall to your knees in appreciation of its beauty. Or just, you know, clap instead. As the film progresses, its dark humor starts to creep in, making the short all the more arresting as it culminates in a deliciously grotesque fashion.

'Lou'

"Lou" is this year's Pixar entry, so you know that it's good. But that doesn't even begin to half explain the brilliance of the film, which revolves around an unseen monster lurking within a lost-and-found toy box. As per usual for Pixar, the plotting is as tight and enthralling as a Beatles hook. But it's also inventive — and with such an emotional core and potent message, it might just be one of the studio's best short films yet.

'Revolting Rhymes'

While the other nominated short films clock in at between five and seven minutes, "Revolting Rhymes" has the comparatively gargantuan length of 28 minutes. The adaptation of Roald Dahl's book, which weaves together the fairy tales of "Three Little Pigs," "Red Riding Hood" and "Snow White," is still a wonderful fable. It mixes the macabre with the playful to create something that is both haunting and beautiful and, if you're a kid, probably traumatizing too.

'Negative Space'

Though riveting, "Negative Space" makes a small impression, especially in comparison to the other nominated films. And yet, the poignant stop-motion film — about a father and son bonding over their ritual of packing a suitcase for the elder's regular business trips — has proved to be a hit, winning 52 awards from 137 nominations. Though it is a little too one-note and its final punchline doesn't quite land, too, it's still majestic enough to provoke an impromptu yelp of "Bravo!" by its end.

Daniel Zovatto thinks Trump's ascendance is a good thing

The "Here and Now" actor on his new series and secret talents.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

"Here and Now," Alan Ball's latest family dramedy, is very much an ensemble piece in every sense of the word. And Daniel Zovatto's Ramon is smack dab in the center.

The 26-year-old, who oozes a slight other-worldliness over the phone, is hopeful that the show will open up conversations about racism, stereotypes and other facets of Trump's America.

"I feel like this show is perfect for the time because it talks about all the things that we don't really want to be talking about," Zovatto says. "I think —" he starts laughing, perhaps conscious of the temerity it takes to say — "that Trump is a good thing." Say what now?

Daniel Zovatto stars as Ramon in the overwhelmingly current series, which airs Sunday nights on HBO. HBO

He quickly clarifies. "He's bringing [out] all these conversations that have been subdued for so many years. Trump is a product of what's going on in the world."

This world being, according to Zovatto, one where we've distanced from ourselves from each other thanks to social media and reality television. "Our society is more focused on reality TV shows and talking about stuff that really doesn't matter," he says. "To be part of a show that brings these conversations to the table, it's valuable and very needed. And it feels good."

Another thing that makes the young actor feel good? His art. When I ask about his paintings, he demurs. "Paying attention to what's going on with you and expressing yourself is important," he says. "Some people go to the gym and lift weights and look at themselves and are like, 'F—k dude, I look good!'"

"But for me, [painting] just gives me a peace of mind," he says. "I think that's a beautiful thing."

Play trivia to pay off your student loans instead of a bar tab

The online trivia game Givling offers huge cash prizes to help its players get out of student loan debt.

patrick.king@metro.us

What if there was a way to have fun while chiseling away at your massive student loans? Better yet, what if there was a video game you could download onto your phone that could help along the way?

It would beat the hell out of getting a second job, that's for sure!

The online trivia game Givling is doing exactly that. By "gamifying" crowdfunding from each of its users, the company creates a large pool of money to be awarded to one of its users at random in order to pay off their student loans.

So, how does it work?

Each time you play, you are placed on a random trivia team (or "funding team") with other players from around the country to answer rapid-fire trivia questions. Your team is allowed three wrong answers before your game is considered "over" and the day's winning team will receive a cash prize.

It beats getting a second job, too.

Players get two free games per day and every additional game they play will cost 50 cents.

By pooling a portion of all of this money, the winning teams will be awarded small daily cash prizes with the rest of the money going toward one winner chosen at random by Givling for a big grand prize.

This lucky player will be awarded a cash prize of up to $50,000 towards paying off their student loan debt. In other words, think of Givling as HQ for people who want to wash away their crippling student loans.

So far, Givling's crusade against student debt has been working as they have paid off twelve of their lucky user's loans for a total amount of $655,044. As they see it – the more people who play, the more grand prizes they will be able to give away and in turn, the more student debt they will be able to erase.

"We know student loans suck, they're such a burden and nobody likes them," explains Seth Beard, chief marketing officer at Givling. "A lot of times people wish they could change things, but now we're creating a community that's really helping people care for each other."

Before people can win these incredible prizes, they have to get through Givling's difficult trivia questions first. And for some, it can feel like earning back a college degree with each prize they win ... or don't win.

Beard understands how crushing these losses can be for some, as playing to pay off your student loans can be an addictive goal to chase.

"There is definitely some heartbreak!" explains Beard, "but at the end of the day, people know as we continue to scale we're going to be doing this with our goal of daily loan payoffs and even multiple loan payoffs. We envision getting there within the next six months and definitely by the end of the year."

Who knew playing trivia could help you crawl out of your current financial ruin?

To join Givling, use the exclusive invite code EO806889 and pay back your loans instead of winning a round of drinks at the bar.

Breastfeeding protections for working mothers increase productivity

Because it's bad enough that you have to go back to the office after maternity leave.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Going back to work can be a tough transition for new mothers. With so many challenges ahead of them, working mothers need to feel as though they are welcome back in their offices once their maternity leave is over and not feel as though they need to fight for safe and separate breastfeeding areas during the day.

This is exactly why an amendment was written into the Affordable Care Act (ACA) that requires employers to provide a reasonable break time for employees to express breast milk for their infants one year after they were born. Employers are also required to "provide a place, other than a bathroom, that is shielded from view and free from intrusion from co-workers and the public" for working mothers to pump.

Aside from these conditions being ideal for mothers, it has been found that these comfortable conditions have been found to improve their overall productivity.

"We know that breastfeeding is best for the mother and best for the baby," explains Jennifer Jordan, director of mom and baby at breast-pump manufacturer Aeraflow. "So through the ACA's and the protection of mothers being able to have a sanitary and proper place to pump, we know that it carries over to the long-term health of the mother as well as that of the infant. If a mother is given a place to pump, we know that she is going to miss less work because her child is less likely to have a host of illnesses throughout that first year of life. Breastfed babies have a lower risk of ear infections, certain stomach conditions. They have a stronger immune system, which allows the baby to be healthier which in turn allows the mother to be more productive."

Basically, the less a new mother has to worry about, the more she will be able to focus on her work. A study cited in The New York Times in January stated that "80 percent of women with professional degrees or doctorates have a child by the time they are 44."

This proves that most women feel confident that they can juggle both a career and their families and in turn deserve the best conditions upon their return from maternity leave.

"Anytime as an employee you feel like you have support and understanding from your employer you feel more engaged and more productive. Knowing that you matter, I think, helps take employees to the next level," explains Jordan. "I would never go into the restroom to eat my lunch, so a mother should never be expected to express milk for her infant. It's wonderful that these mothers are now protected."

Pierce Day spoiled by LeBron's Cavs

The Celtics produced one of their worst efforts of the season Sunday against Cleveland.

matt.burke@metro.us

On an afternoon that was slated to be a five-hour long celebration of the success of Paul Pierce and the Celtics' past, the Celtics' present laid an egg.

The current Celtics got their doors blown off by LeBron James and the new-look Cavs Sunday at TD Garden, losing 121-99 as the reigning Eastern Conference champs made it clear that the Celtics will have their work cut out for them if they desire to advance to the NBA Finals this spring.

Brad Stevens' team looked completely dumbfounded by the Cavs' fresh offense, as LeBron got all of his new teammates involved. George Hill - Cleveland's replacement at point guard for the jettisoned Isaiah Thomas - pumped in 12 points, Jordan Clarkson tallied 17 points off the bench, and Rodney Hood finished with 15.

"They've got a great player [in LeBron James] and have surrounded him with a bunch of great shooters," Stevens said of the Cavs' new group. "They dominated the game in all areas. There wasn't just one area. They dominated."

The 64 points the Celtics allowed in the first half were the most they've given up before halftime all season long.

The C's had talked about how they wanted to get into the paint early and often against the Cavs defense but Boston wound up jacking up 38 3-pointers in the contest, hitting only 10.

Terry Rozier led the C's with 21 points of the bench while Kyrie

Irving finished with 18. The game began with promise for Boston as in the first quarter with Irving guarding him, LeBron threw up a brick on one end - and immediately on the other end, Irving drilled a step-back jumper in his former teammate's face.

It was all downhill from there, however, as the Celtics were outscored 33-20 in the second quarter.

The Celtics will now have two days off before facing Doc Rivers, who was in the house Sunday for the Paul Pierce retirement ceremony, and the Los Angeles Clippers Wednesday night. The Valentine's Day tilt will be the Celtics' final game before the NBA All-Star break in LA.

The Celtics (40-18) have now lost two games in a row and are looking up at Toronto (39-16) for the No. 1 seed in the East. The Cavs (33-22) are 5.5 games behind the Celtics.

Aries Watch your back. Concentrate on whatever will help you advance. A change should be handled openly and objectively. Take the initiative and live up to your expectations.

Taurus Look for alternatives instead of overreacting. Don't feel the need to make a move before you have heard all the facts. Focus on taking care of your responsibilities.

Gemini Do things properly the first time to avoid getting into a bitter dispute over a lack of detail and precision. Intelligent ideas are only favorable if they are affordable.

Cancer Keep moving until you reach your destination. You will outmaneuver anyone trying to compete with you. A unique twist to an old idea will come in handy.

Leo Size up what everyone else is doing and what's available to you. Make choices based on what you can handle mentally, financially and emotionally before you sign up.

Virgo Network with peers to gain a different perspective on the latest trends. Keeping up in areas of interest will give you a better idea of what you'll have to do to be competitive.

Libra Refuse to give in to emotional criticism. Know what you are capable of, and follow through with your plans. Don't limit your chance to get ahead or make a difference.

Scorpio Spend more time on personal growth and changes that make you feel good. Associations with people you find trustworthy and reliable will help you make better choices.

Sagittarius Protect against injury or insult. Don't share with people you don't know well or aren't sure you can trust. Live within your means and avoid indulgent behavior.

Capricorn Rely on your intuitive senses to help you make the right choice when it comes to personal money matters, contracts or legal concerns. Physical changes are encouraged.

Aquarius Helping others may make you feel good, but make sure you don't overdo it. Someone will overreact if you are too demanding or judgmental.

Pisces Personal information you share will improve your reputation. Participation will encourage stronger connections. Don't argue to prove yourself; just do your thing. EUGENIA LAST
